London's New Light. Frank Leile's.

Enston station, in London, England, is lighted by a new light which is believed to possess many advantages. Ordinary coal gas, mixed in about the proportion of one to eight of common air, is supplied under the usual gas service pressure to burners over which are placed caps of platinum wire gause. The mixture, when lighted, burns without flame about the cap, which is raised to a brilliant white heat by the combustion. The light is perfectly steady, there being no flame, and is not affected by wind or rain. More than twice as much light, it is said, is obtained, with a given consumption of gas, as by the did system. Twenty burners replace fifty of the old kind, and light a platform 900 feet in length.

"It is his laugh. The butcher and the baker and the candlestick maker, not to speak of the tailor, may do a good deal for man. But only thorough refinement can make him laugh like a gentleman."
"And, now, what is that laugh like?"
"As with the quality we call style it cannot be defined; but, just the same, there is no mistaking the laugh of a gentleman. Listen and note the next time you go to a reception or dinner party."

The Bard was saked to compose a little poem upon his childhood, and this is what he produced: "How dear to my heart is the school I attended, and how I rememper so distant and dim, that red headed Bill and the pin that I bended, and care Bill and the pin that I bended, and carefully put on the bench under him. And how I recall the surprise of the master, when Bill gave a yell and sprang up from the pin so high that his bullet head smashed up the plaster above, and the scholars all set up a din. The active boy Billy, that high leaping Billy, that loud shouting Billy who sat on a pin."

Opinion of a Leading Editor. There is a collateral cause, and a most important one, in certain depressed conditions of the nervous system, which is not little known and appreciated. In healthy conditions of the nervous system.
